SUPPORTING PERFORMING ARTS CIRCULATION IN EUROPE

PROGRAMMERS ON THE MOVE

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are looking for professional programmers or programme advisers of venues and festivals who have at least two years experience as responsible or co-responsible person for programming in the performing arts (theatre, dance, art performance, street theatre or circus, but not music), who are interested in reflecting the issue of programming international performances, who are interested in (re-)defining their role as programmers and protagonists in the circuit of international mobility, who want to built up and/or strengthen networks, and share ideas of audience development.

Background:

SPACE is providing a mobile European training programme for professionals who are programming performing arts within festivals and/or venues and who want to deepen their knowledge and analyse and improve their recent and future work.

We are looking for 33 individuals who will be divided into 3 separate groups. Each group will undergo a training programme made up of 2 sessions (each lasting 4 days) and taking place in 2 European countries.

The participants will analyse their role/attitude/identity as programmers, their position in the regional/social/political context, their position as mediator between the artists and the audience and develop visions and ideas to improve the circulation and presentation of performing art in Europe.

Each group will have one moderator who will follow up the sessions, participate in the discussions and support the trainees in developing their visions, and deepening their perception of the role of a programmer, with the support of an experienced programmer (a director of a venue or a festival), who will participate at specific "hot items" two days per session, and also throughout the contribution of other professionals or personalities.

In addition they will be offered the chance to get to know different forms of performing arts festivals and theatres, built up or consolidate their network on a European level.

Aims of the training:

- To analyse the identity of a programmer and (re-)define his/her attitude and role towards the artists, the audience, the geopolitical and social context.
- To learn about the handling of freedom and restrictions (artistic, financial, infrastructural, political, social).
- To get to know different systems of festivals and theatres in Europe.
- To compare and confront one's own views and working tools with those of other programmers.
- To create a network of arts professionals with shared experience and understanding.
- To develop a better understanding of Europe and its cultural diversity, both on a practical and on a political level.
- To understand and respond to the central challenge of sustainability and its impacts on the programmers work.
- To develop an understanding of the importance and practice of international collaboration.

Who can apply:

Candidates should fulfil the following conditions:

- At least 2 years professional experience as responsible person (or co-responsible person) of a programme (or of part of a programme as adviser) for a performing arts festival or a permanent theatre.
- Currently employed or contracted by a festival or a venue.
- Living and/or working in one of the Countries in Europe (geographically).
- Fluent spoken and written English. Applicants should submit their application and supporting documents in English and should expect a telephone conversation in English as part of the final selection process.
- With experience of working in an international context.

What we further expect of the candidates:

- Evidence of having been personally and directly responsible (or co-responsible) or adviser for an international programme of a festival or a venue.
- Evidence of a professional network, preferably transnational.
- Candidates have to send the concepts of their last and next programme/project

Content and methodology:

We are not creating a training for programmers. We are creating an exchange program for programmers focused on the issue of mobility of shows. It means that all subjects should be connected with "foreign performances", how to support or to improve the quality of the circulation of show, an issue where the programmers are one of the main actors of this mobility.

We asked to three moderators to follow the three groups in which the selected applicants will be divided. The moderators will lead the sessions, participate in the discussions and support the trainees in developing their visions, and deepening their perception of the role of a programmer, with the support of an experienced programmer, who will participate to both the sessions.

There will be four themes and specific subjects for each of the 2 seminars the participants will follow.

The four themes, which will be same for each seminar:

1. Aesthetic questions (with the interventions of philosophers, sociologists, art historian)
2. Audience development (with professionals from the field)
3. "Technical questions", "tools" to improve the circulation of shows (with professionals from the field)
4. Identity/role of a programmer

The subjects proposed to the moderators are:

- "Standardisation": the growing circulation of shows might get to a kind of standardisation? The programs of the well-known European festival are getting a bit similar. Some artists are showing everywhere while some others do not have opportunities to be seen by foreign audiences. What kind of influence does have the growing circulation of shows on the work of the artists themselves? Is there a tendency of losing "identity" and create shows to answer the "expectation" of international festivals? What could be the role of the programmers in this new context?
- "It is not for my audience": how to prepare the audience to attend foreign performances.

- "How to "look at" a performance"
- "The history of "taste" (aesthetic): the "taste" is a cultural construction
- "Censorship": Do the programmers have political constraints concerning foreign performances? How to deal with it? Do the programmers censor themselves?
- "The technical obstacles of the circulation of shows": questions of finance, artistic trips to discover shows, supportive organisations for circulations of shows, EU programs, how access to networks, challenge of sustainability ...
- "Why this performance at this time?": it is probably covered under other subjects already but i find this question important because it includes the question of responsibility and trust towards audiences and artists, and awareness of the general situation in one's home country.
- "Thematic programming": festivals or seasons programmed around a certain topic or geographical area. What other criteria is there?
- "Own productions, commissioned work": this is often a part of the programming

SPACE - SUPPORTING PERFORMING ARTS CIRCULATION IN EUROPE

Nine national cultural institutions with an international policy and practice created a platform to analyse persistent imbalances (between countries, regions, artists, disciplines and performance venues) in terms of the circulation of performing arts works in Europe, and to experiment with new tools and mechanisms to reduce them. SPACE has created a 3 year-long project, supported by the European Union and based on three strands of activity. These are:

- The creation of an online tool, Travelogue, to collect and compare data and produce an analysis of any imbalances that exist.
- Mobile training programmes for performing arts managers, programmers and journalists/critics.
- The reinforcement of the institutional capacity within national support organisations throughout Europe.

The partners in the SPACE project are: ONDA in Paris (National office for the circulation of performing Arts), VTI in Brussels (Vlaams Theater Instituut), TIN in Amsterdam (Theater Instituut Nederlands), NTIL in Riga (New Theatre Institute of Latvia), British Council in London, ETI in Roma (Ente Teatrale Italiano), Pro Helvetia Swiss Arts Council in Zürich, The Red House in Sofia, the Institut umění - Divadelní ústav (Arts and Theatre Institute) in Prague. The Zentrum BRD des Internationalen Theaterinstituts in Berlin. IETM cooperates also in the project.
